

How to reach Naples

Arrival by plane

Flight to Naples

Naples has an International Airport called “Capodichino”. The airport has good links to main European cities like London, Paris, Frankfurt, Munich and main Italian cities like Milan and Rome by direct flights. It is located at a 7 km from the city centre. Participants are suggested to fly directly to the Airport of Napoli Capodichino, scheduling stop in one of the main cities. For information about Naples Airport and flights, please visit the web site:

Capodichino Airport: <http://www.aeroportoedinapoli.it/homepage>

Flight to Rome

Alternatively, the best and closest destination is Rome Fiumicino. From this Airport participants will need to take a train called Leonardo Express leaving from a railways station located at the airport every 30 minutes (tickets cost euro 14,00). Leonardo Express takes about 32 minutes to the Railways Station of Rome Termini. From Rome Termini fast trains called Freccia Rossa and Freccia Argento leave about every hour to Naples, taking about 1 hour and 15 minutes. For timetable of trains connecting Rome to Naples and back please visit the web site: www.trenitalia.com/tcom-en

For Leonardo Express go to Trenitalia page and search for “Fiumicino” <https://www.trenitalia.com/tcom-en>

A taxi service is available at the airport in Rome but the distance between Rome and Naples is about 200 km, so the taxi will be really very expensive.

From the Port, it is necessary to take another bus to arrive in via Partenope or in Piazza Vittoria, or just take a nice walk through the city center.

Arrival by train

The main railway station of Napoli is called Napoli Centrale – Piazza Garibaldi. Naples has good train connections through Fast Trains (Freccia Rossa or Freccia Argento) with all main Italian cities. ## A short history of the Engineering School of University of Naples Federico II

The University of Naples Federico II is one of the oldest academic institutions in the world having been founded by the Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II von Schwaben in 1224.

The School of Engineering of the University Federico II is one of the oldest and largest in Italy. The first school of Engineering was set in Naples in 1811 during the Napoleonic occupation of the Kingdom of Naples. Joachim Murat, King of Naples and Napoleon brother-in-law, decreed the foundation of the “Scuola di Applicazione di Ponti e Strade” (School for the construction of bridges and roads) on 4th March 1811. The school was modelled on the Ecole d’Application des Ponts et Chaussées, which had been reorganized by Napoleon in 1804.

After Unification, in 1863, the school took the name of Royal School of Engineering and was made directly dependent from the Ministry of Education of the new unified Kingdom of Italy. The declared aim of the school was to “provide students with a degree in Mathematics all the necessary know-how and skills to practice the Art of Engineering and Architecture”. A complete reorganization of the degree courses came in 1876 when the Regolamento Generale (General Rules) of all the Royal Schools of Engineering in Italy was changed. Since then onwards, two general 5 year degree courses were offered in the School: one for engineers, the other for architects.

In 1904 the Royal School of Engineering changed name into Higher Polytechnic School (Scuola Superiore Politecnica) and was finally transformed into the Faculty of Engineering of the University of Naples in 1935.

The school was first hosted in the historical buildings of the University and then moved to a new location in 1965, when the new building of the Faculty of Engineering designed by the Italian architect Luigi Cosenza was opened in Fuorigrotta, a relatively newer area of Naples. Since then the Faculty has developed fast and nowadays offers more than 20 degree courses, several MSc. Programmes and Doctoral Schools.

In 2011 the Faculty has celebrated the 200th anniversary of its Foundation. Since 2013 the Faculty of Engineering has been included as one of the Divisions of the Polytechnic School of the University of Naples Federico II.
